Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant argues that Quintana does not output a selected one of a first color or a second color, as required by claims 1, 12, and 20. Applicant states that Quintana instead decides whether or not a pixel should be output at all. The Quintana reference deals with printers and therefore does not print a pixel when it has been decided that white is the correct color for a pixel location. However, the effect is equivalent to "choosing" white as a color, much like a monitor would have an "off" pixel in black areas. As explained in the final Office Action, Quintana decides to output a color value as disclosed in p. 2, section 0025. This output value for a pixel is either 0 or 255. This output is then translated to a physical medium by the printer by either printing a black dot or not printing a black dot. Note that this is not only coming from "knowledge generally available in the art" as applicant appears to be arguing. The reference specifically uses the term "output pixel" and says that the value of said pixel is either 0 or 255, either of which would read on a color value for a pixel. Quintana then translates this to an on or off state and decides whether to create a pixel on a page, which is also referred to as an "output pixel".
